How About Your Diet?

YOUR LOOKS DEPEND UPON YOUR FOOD. Right food will give you right nourishment, which, if combined with enough exercise to keep the organs

Milk and cream, whole wheat bread, potatoes, butter, olive oil, plenty of water, starchy things, beef, chicken, juicy meats, ice-cream, hot chocolate.

If you are fat, the list varies a trifle. Skimmed milk, very little of that, very rare beef, chicken broth, no water with meals, not much water at all, no butter, no sugar. Pickles are good, grape-fruit, oranges, black coffee, strong tea, dry toast, lettuce, spinach also, but no candy, no cake, no pastry, no ice-cream.

If you are anemic, rare roast beef and steak, beets, salads of all kinds, with plenty of olive oil, rich milk, plenty of water, green vegetables, cranberries, chicken, roast lamb, bacon, eggs, potatoes, very little sweets.

If you are nervous, cut tea and coffee absolutely from the list, use hot milk or hot chocolate, eat plenty of salads, drink lots of water. Follow the food list for thin people, and take a nap each day if possible.

If you are inclined to constipation, eat juicy foods, fruits of all kinds except bananas; drink two quarts of water a day, eat lots of figs. If you are inclined the other way, barley broth will help you a lot.

Questions and Answers

Every month a large pimple comes on my nose, red, with a yellowish discharge. One doctor says it's catarrh, another said it was hereditary, or my mother had the same affliction. What advice can you give me about it?—Margie.

Reply—What special period does the pimple appear? The trouble is with your blood; you need a blood purifier and tonic. Probably the fact that the blood vessels are near the surface of the skin on the nose brings this pimple to that spot. If you are not anemic, don't eat much meat or sweet foods for a time. But get a blood purifier—that's all the trouble needs.

What can I make my ankles slant? Wearing low shoes this summer has made them much thicker.—Lillian T.

Reply—High shoes will automatically reduce them. You can have the buttons on your first high pair tightened after wearing them a few weeks.

A LITTLE JOURNEY INTO FASHIONLAND

There have been great discussions as to whether we should obey the dictates of hygiene and comfort, and allow our waists their due freedom, or start pulling them in to the measurements of 25 years ago. But mercifully the arbiters of our sartorial fate have given judgment in favor of fair play for the waist line. In fact, a large number of frocks are to be seen with rather wide, loose sashes. Such a style is equally becoming to slim or stout figures, providing, of course, they are not too pronounced.

After all, in these practical days when so many women are engaged in active work of some description, it would be illogical to start compressed waists, or exaggerated modes of any sort. Also, there is a great objection in the best houses to silly imitation of military fashions. The sash of the moment is distinctly feminine. While daytime frocks are very plain in line and sober in color, in the evening we women may be as picturesque as we please. There is no doubt that the straight, simple lines suit most women best.

Some New Blouses. Blouses, of course, are as popular as ever, and many are seen with a full basque. For instance, a negligee blouse, carried out in brown and pale yellow Georgette, which was seen some time ago, was lined with pink crepe de chine. The big, becoming collar of nut brown was edged with picot, and the deep hem, also of the dark shade, was joined on to the yellow Georgette by hem-stitching. Here the waist line was indicated by the ruching of the Georgette, with blue and brown glaze ribbon run through and tied with sash ends. Such a garment will be equally useful for day and evening wear at home.

A very attractive new blouse is of pleated Georgette of a lavender shade, into which are inserted medallions of plain Georgette, embroidered round in dull pastel shades. It fastens with tiny pearl buttons and has transparent collar and cuffs of Georgette. This should be worn with a heavy serge skirt.

Hats this season are as sensible as our frocks, in addition to being ever so smart. Black panne is an old favorite revived, and beavers are to be had in all shapes and shades.

So far, practical headgear is of medium dimensions, but the ultra-smart and picturesque hats will be undoubtedly rare. Wings and quaint adaptations from our farmyard friends are, as is ever the case in the early autumn, to be seen on our fairs and country hats.

Veils are an important feature. Many of them are decorated with a border of soutache on the net.

her own living and knows therefore the value of a dollar, to throw money away on a costume of cheap material, made in an eccentric style that is sure to be in favor more than a few months.

It is quite possible to dress attractively and appropriately for the office. Take the two suits illustrated, for instance. Both show new features, but both at the same time are conservative. Dressed in either, one of these costumes a woman could spend her day in an office with the feeling that she was well and appropriately dressed.

USELESS FURNITURE

When a piece of furniture becomes worn or broken or for any reason unfit for use, the housekeeper should determine at once whether it is worth repairing and keeping for further use. If it does not justify being given storage space in her house, it is the same with old clothing, discarded draperies, and other accumulations. If they have not sufficient value to be cleaned and repaired and put away for future use, then they are not worth the space they occupy and should either be given to somebody who can use them or sold for whatever they will bring.

For convenience, as well as for cleanliness, any piece of clothing, bed or table linen, or piece of furniture should be thoroughly clean when put away. If it is not, stains or odors and dust will go deeper and deeper into it until in many cases articles become useless even while stored away awaiting the time when they will be needed. A woman of sixty who has a hobby of keeping all the trills and furbelows of her girlhood has shocked some of her friends by dragging from trunks and closets for their inspection lace or gowns or linens which were put away removing stains or other soiled condition. After being kept for years in this condition the articles lost whatever beauty they originally possessed.

Old night dresses or underwear no longer fit for service will make excellent material for bandages or other uses for which a fine, soft cloth is needed, but they should be put away ready for quick use when a need for them arises. Instead of stuffing them into a trunk or closet just as they are, it saves storage space and makes them ready for use to remove all seams, hems and uselessly worn parts before putting them away.

A careful housekeeper hit upon a clever idea to rid her house of all articles which did not justify their position in her house either because of their usefulness or their beauty. She went carefully through all the rooms and removed to a storeroom all articles of whose value she was doubtful. She allowed them to remain in this storeroom for a month, at the end of which time she was able to determine whether any of them justified being reinstated in her home, and she was surprised that so few of them were found worth retaining. Some such idea can be carried out to advantage by almost every housekeeper.
